The tremendously low temperatures of the upper atmosphere have always been a big problem in high altitude flying. Not only do they sometimes put instruments out of action, but unless elaborate precautions are taken, they would put the pilot out of action, too. So his clothing has to be electrically heated, the waistcoat, socks, and fur gloves being threaded with fine wires for this purpose. The goggles have also to be treated electrically to prevent ice forming on them. For breathing, oxygen is necessary, and is obtained through a chin and mouth mask.—Answers.

Cheapering the Dollar

United States Senator Fawcett Temporary Suspension of Gold Standard

United States Senator Ellison Smith, Democrat, from South Carolina, told newspapermen he favored a temporary suspension of the gold standard by the United States to "cheaper the dollar and increase commodity prices."

As an example, he said cotton was selling for 11 cents a pound in Liverpool, but that this meant only five cents in the United States if the time exchange had been made.

"Cheapering the dollar by suspending the gold standard temporarily," Smith concluded, "would raise commodity prices and aid the farmer and industry."

New Uniform

British Troops To Be Clothed In New Comfortable Fashion

The Dominion troops set an example to the Old Country during the war of uniforms giving utility and comfort, rather than parade ground smartness. The new uniforms intended for the British army which were shown in London by the war office are more easy wearing than anything conceived of before. They suggest Boy Scouts and old-style hikers more than the staid and stiff of His Majesty's regiments.

The cap is not the stiff, peaked variety, but is a flat with wide hem giving shade to eyes and neck and it is of a soft material and can be rolled up and put in the pocket. It has no chin strap or other kind of fastener and one imagines that if a line of soldiers are on parade every man will be at a different angle and every brain will be flapping in the wind.

Instead of the tight tunic with thick collar buttoning close up the neck the new jacket is loose fitting and has an open neck. It has pouch pockets and the buttons are of gun metal instead of brass which needs to be polished.

Former Mayor War Secretary Has Always Lived Dangerously

Major-General the Right Hon. Sir John Reilly, former Secretary of War and Under Secretary for Air, attained 64th birthday today, and much to the surprise of everyone, especially himself. He has always lived dangerously and has had many hairbreadth escapes. Among his many thrilling experiences are falling a sheer 200 feet down a cliff, facing a hostile rifle at 15 yards, when a mine seemed impossible, and escaping from a plane when the petrol tank exploded at an altitude of 4,000 feet. His book of personal adventures makes exciting reading.

Smoke watching, one of Britain's strangest occupations, is declining. Scientists, however, have perfected a device by which, if smoke becomes too heavy in a chimney, a warning bell is sounded and the boiler-room attendants know they have been firing too heavily. The smoke watchers, whose profession is threatened by this device work in eight-hour shifts, day and night, rain or sunshine—Answers.

Have Been Working Overtime

Egg-Laying Contests In England

British chickens have been working overtime this year. Reports of the 1931-32 egg-laying trials show that both averages and individual records are higher than in previous years. For instance, 3,300 pullets entered the national test at Mildford, Surrey, returned an average of over 185 eggs per bird for 48 weeks. Four pullets laid over 300 eggs each, the highest scores being 318 and the best having regard to quality as well as quantity, being 314.

But the most amazing record of all was nothing to do with the tests; it was set up, quite involuntarily, by a hen which wandered into the line of play while a game of golf was in progress, and was hit by one of the balls. It jumped high in the air and then, when it came down, laid six eggs in rapid succession—two with shells and four without—Answers.

Explanations and Comments

The Birth of Jesus At Bethlehem, verses 1-7.—When Caesar ordered the enrollment of everyone in the Roman Empire, the people of Palestine went each to "his own city" to be enrolled. Bethlehem had been the home of David, their ancestor, and therefore Mary and Joseph went from Nazareth of Galilee, where they were living, to Bethlehem to be enrolled. There Jesus was born, and Mary laid Him in a manger, because there had been no room for them in the inn.

The Story Of The Shepherds and the Angels, verses 8-14.—"Be not afraid," said the angels, and words of great joy which shall be to all the world, "for the angel said words heard by shepherds who were watching their flocks in the fields near Bethlehem on the night that Jesus was born. And the good tidings was that a son was born to you this day in the City of David a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."

The title of Jesus as the One consecrated to be the Redeemer of the world, for it means "The Anointed One." The Son of God became Son of Man, the Son of men might mean "God's Son." This is the sign unto you: "Ye shall find a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, and lying in a manger." The sign explained. The "sign" was in the unexpected circumstance of the babe lying in a manger. The swaddling clothes were the bands of cloth which the Oriental mother wraps lightly around the body of her babe, confining the legs and arms. They are a multitude of the heavily bound appeared praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men of good will." "He was pleased."

Relief Commission

Saskatchewan Body To Accept Responsibility For Unemployed

The Saskatchewan relief commission accepts full responsibility for unemployed persons in farms, once they are placed.

This is the interpretation placed on the agreement forwarded from Ottawa following a series of conferences between provincial government and relief commission officials, and was given by C. B. Daniel, general manager of the Saskatchewan relief commission.

The commission assumes no responsibility for such persons until they are actually placed. They remain a charge on the municipality, town or village until such time.

The commission is empowered, pending planment, to pay to accepted organizations such as multi-palities and relief committees, the actual cost of food and shelter for single hand-to-mouth unemployed men and women, physically fitted to accept work on farms, or in the case of men, to enter a concentration camp, providing such aggregate food, clothing and shelter allowance does not exceed 40 cents per man-day.

Ottawa has been asked by the commission seeking clarification on the question as to whether single unemployed girls may be placed in city homes under the government assistance scheme, and also whether the commission may place them with organizations such as the Y.W.C.A. and pay up to 40 cents per day for their keep.

Wireless Telephone

Will It Be In Time To Supply the Old Morse Code?

Wireless telephone has swept away much of the old-fashioned Morse Code, and now comes the news that its place in the British post office telephone system is being taken by the telegraph.

But I think it will be a long time before they kill the romance of the Morse Code in the public eye.

The first words ever tapped out by Morse were, "What hath God wrought?" They were sent from Washington to Baltimore on May 24, 1844, by Samuel Morse, whose electro-telegraph system was the first of a wide scheme, until he succeeded.

The most important message sent transmitted was from a ship in distress—the "C. Q." which signified "Come Quickly, Danger."

But nowadays if an airman is in distress he does not send out a "C. Q." He just speaks the word "Mayday" into his wireless telephone. That word is said to be a corruption of the French "M'aidez" (Help Me).

Vanouver Banker Had Edge On

A United States citizen presented some silver, silver dollars and several 25 gold pieces to his country's currency at a Vancouver Bank. He got 10 cents premium on the dollar for his bits, eight cents on his silver and nothing on his gold.

He protested against the discrimination against gold in favor of paper, but the banker explained: "Your gold pieces are worth no more to us than Canadian gold pieces of the same face value. We will give 15 in Canadian bills for a 25 Canadian gold piece, and we can give no more for an American gold piece of the same amount."

"But I thought you were paying a premium on gold?"

"On raw gold from the mines," replied the banker.

"And by the way," stated the banker, "you will have to leave the gold here now, because it is illegal to take gold out of Canada without a Government license."

CHAPTER III.

A Call To Vengeance

During that dash down the Mackenzie, Alan's thoughts were not envisible. . . . They used Margaret Fournier as a means of making their getaway from the steamer. It worked so well then that they might try the idea again. They might try to capture Joyce and use her as a sort of hostage to protect themselves.

But somehow he did not greatly fear they would do this. He remembered the gun she always carried, his own gift to her on her twentieth birthday. A black automatic, a tiny thing like a toy, it nevertheless was hidden and effective as a terror bulwark. That big red-bearded bandit who had threatened to put a bullet "agar e'even" the eyes of Margaret Fournier, would likely get one between his own if he tried any brutality with Joyce MacMillan.

To Alan it seemed pretty clear that Bill in his haste and excitement had made a mistake about those men being strangers to every one aboard the steamer. It didn't know it, but they knew. Alan concluded: "They aren't strangers, of course. Bill just made a mistake."

Bill hid behind two blanket packs. Constantly Whipple sat fidgeting his rifle, peering ahead and as though at any moment he expected to meet the outlaw canoes here on the Mackenzie. Alan watched him with something of scorn in his eyes. Whipple was constantly spying upon the other men, listening with long ears, reporting every sound that happened and a lot that did not.

Forty miles below Endurance, sweeping near to shore around a great bend, Alan looked ahead and sighted the Midnight Sun out in midstream, plowing steadily up south. At his gesture, Pelneauk reversed the launch and snubbed its heading speed, and Bill began unslashing one of the canoes. As the two craft drew nearer, Alan rose up and signaled that he wished to come aboard the steamer. The boat stopped, a ladder was let down, and Bill hurried up in the hurry. Margaret Fournier was safely back on board. Several of the men, hastily patching one of the smashed canoes had followed up the Alouka a mile and found her on a willow island where the bandits had set her off.

When Alan came on deck, almost his first sight was of Jimmy Mont-gomery's little girl, perched upon a pile of cargo, showered with cash and glances from every one. As he glanced at the tiny gold-haired tot, Alan thought of her mother dying less than a year ago, her young father cut down today by an out-law's bullet; and he had a swift vision of the bleak orphanage, the friendless and homeless life, which lay ahead of her, now that Jimmy was dead. He was not deceived by the attention she was getting now. Every one's sympathy for her today, but that would cool mighty quick; and then she'd be thrown into some orphanage, maybe along with half-breed Indian children. Alan thought, "She's Jimmy's child; Jimmy was my partner; it's up to me to do something about her."

With nothing more definite than this in mind, he directed Ashmun, the white-haired skipper "You put her off at Endurance tonight. Give her to Elizabeth. Say I'll be back in two or three days."

Following the old captain, he stepped softly, but in hand, into the one well-lit cabin of the steamer. He remembered Jimmy as a tall partner and a quiet gentle soul and the most utterly fearless man he had ever known. Some silent he stood beside the berth looking down for the space of half a minute, sick at heart, his eyes blurring. Why had it been Jimmy who was cut down?—a young man, a young father, the best and bravest of them all.

Then like a small whisper in his ears, a thought came, edged with the cold steel of the man's death:

"You were the only one who drew a gun. You knew they'd kill you."

It was a belt-gun against six rifles; but you stood up and shot. You were always that kind; and so was Curt. Now you're both gone; now I'm alone, of us three—"

The desolation was unbearable. Bill following, he turned and went out of the cabin, into the sunshine of the deck. A grim mood had come over him, a mood shot through with pera supper of scones and breaded mushrooms and wilted plums which she herself had shot that morning.

As she stood, poised at the party shut away from the crackle and sooth of the cook stove, she heard some peculiar noise somewhere in the night. She went out to the window and there heard it more distinctly—a faint drone that rose and fell with the great winds drifting out of the spruces.

The puzzling sound drew lower, plainer. . . . Then suddenly Joyce knew.

The police launch! Coming up the Big Alouka. Coming slowly because of the treacherous channel, but driving on through the twilight in spite of the danger.

That launch went out on matter of importance. . . . And this patrol men were very important, to bring the men up a perilous river at this hour.

"Throwing a cape about her shoulders she ran through the trailing hair, out into the sharp pine-scented air; down to the canoe landing at the river bank.

As she stood on the mud-flimed plank, with the whispering breeze molding cape and dress closely about her vigorous young body, Joyce tried to pray that Alan was not leading this patrol. Her girlish pride was crying that she should not want to see Alan Baker. Her rational mind was warning that it would be better for her if she never saw him again at all. But no pride or rationalizing could beat down the secret throbbing expectancy of meeting Alan, of hearing his voice, if he were miles more.

Through the whole long winter

Joyce had been slowly realizing that her return to this northern Waterways country had been a terrible mistake. Once she had been away, free of it all. With the true instinct of colonial Britons for their children, her father and mother had sent her out to school, a solid old English institution in Ontario. When she finished, she quickly hunted up a job for herself.

In a place with a government bureau, where her knowledge of Indian languages and customs made her uniquely valuable, in preparing manifests for the far northern agencies. Independent, earning a good salary, with friends and sports and work she liked, she had given up all of it and returned to this isolated far post on a sub-Arctic river.

Her mother had died, and her father, alone, crushed by the relentless competition of big companies out to "get" him, had morally gone to pieces.

Alan in his letters had written her the sorry facts. Her duty, clear as a call, had spoken to her, "If you return, you may be able to stop them you may help Dad back to where he was." And she had come.

She knew that other folk were surprised at her loyalty, and thought her foolish, and were shrugging shoulders at the hopelessness of a mere girl trying to lift Dave MacMillan above the stinking and Indian-woman life he had unk into. But Joyce did not consider it foolish, and she could see no great logic about it. Whatever his demoralization now, her father had been the best of fathers to her. Looking at him not as a father but as a man, she could realize, in her own hood, that he had been the best of husbands to her mother. She felt it was her mother's death; that was the actual tragedy of God withdrawing his hand, which really had broken her father's hand.

And Joyce was beginning to realize, as the slow months passed, that her patient battle was anything but fruitless. Slowly, so slowly that only she herself could see it, she was winning her struggle, she was lifting her father out of his bewildered demoral-ization. If only she were given another season or two, she could save his life.

TAKES OUT PAPERS

Not the least interesting point about the Lytton commission's report on Japan's doings in Manchuria is the fact that a Lytton was chairman.

Lord Lytton is a member of that older British aristocracy which has always accepted the responsibility and duty of public service that is applied in authority.

The Lytton family has been serving every British monarch since Henry IV; each generation has contributed its talents, such as they have been, to the state. And in this it is no different in tradition, from such other great governing families as the Cecil, the Howards, the Sackvilles, the Spencers and the Church-ills.

Changes are proposed, are accepted and are finally discarded in favor of other changes. An insular nation develops into a great empire; that empire, in turn, undergoes profound changes; that empire decides to enter into an experiment in internationalism such as the League. Always, with a consistency that is astounding, the same families continue to produce their share of leaders. It may seem a little extravagant to say so, but we must expect that were revolution to come to Great Britain a Lytton, a Sackville or a Cecil would be found as a confidential adviser to the chief minister.
